Case Report - Pet Patient 4 - 2017

Case Background

Feline

Case Data

The family contacted us regarding preservation services and informed us that the pet had passed approximately one month earlier and had since been stored in a freezer at the veterinary office. We explained that the delay and storage conditions may have resulted in significant tissue damage and that preservation would be limited to the brain. After considering the available options for several months, the owner contacted us again and chose to proceed.

The owner placed the pet on ice and drove to our facility. We performed the isolation procedure while keeping the tissue frozen. The pet patient's brain was placed in liquid nitrogen for permanent storage.
